WIVELY. adv. [from wive.] Belonging to a wife.
Basilus could not abstain from praising Parthenia, as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively faithfulness. Sid.
WIVES. n. f. The plural of wife.
A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from approbation of his own reason. Spenser's Ireland.
WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer; an inchanter; a he-witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.
Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams.
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Richard III.
That damn'd wizard, hid in fly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent
The aidless innocent lady his wiv'd prey. Milton.
The prophecies of wizards old
Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold.
The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.
WO. n. f. [pa, Saxon.]
1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
The king is mad - how RIF is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenuities feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woe by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe weary'd tongue is still. Shakespeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, the eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary wastes, they weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow wo is; anciently wo worth; pa puppy, Saxon.

Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jer. x. 19.
If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.
Wo to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden's Allion.
3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice; of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one universal confusion. South's Sermons.
4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective, as particularly in the following lines.
Wo are we, fir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

WOL

Wo is used by Shakespeare for a stop or cessation; from the particle wo pronounced by carters to their horses when they would have them stop.
Love's a mighty lord;
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
There is no wo to his correction. Shakespeare.
WOAD. n. f. [paw, Saxon.] A plant. Shakespeare.
The flower consists of four leaves, which are disposed in form of a cross; out of whose flower cup rises the point, which afterwards turns to a fruit in the shape of a tongue, flat at the edge, gaping two ways, having but one cell, in which is contained for the most part one oblong seed; is cultivated in England for the use of dyers, who use it for laying the foundation of many colours. Miller.
In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When drefs was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.
WOEGONE. n. f. [two and begone.] A lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow. Shakespeare.
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And wuld have told him half his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue
Tanc'd he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woe-begone was he with pains of love. Paisfax.
WORT. The obsolete participle passive from To WAT.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have wof, Shakespeare.
Did never float upon the swelling tide.

The woful captive kinfmen are inclos'd, Dryden.
2. Calamitous; afflictive.
3. Wretched; paltzy; forry.
What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some star'd hackney-fomneteer, or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.
WO'FULLY. adv. [from woful.]
1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.
2. Wretchedly; in a sense of contempt.
He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.
WOLF. n. f. Wolfs, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country; from the Saxon joba, a plain and a place without wood. Gilpin's Camden.
Wold and wald with the Saxons signified a ruler or governor; from whence bertwald is a famous governor; ethelwald a noble governor; herwald, and by inversion waldher, a general of an army. Gilpin's Camden.
WOLF. [paw, Saxon; wof, Dutch.]
1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep.
Advance our waving colours on the walls,
Reluc'd is Orleans from the English wolves. Shakespeare.
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,
Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare's King Lear.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscribe'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. An eating ulcer.
How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions; and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceives a reality therein. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
WO'LFDOG. n. f. [wolf and dog.]
1. A dog of a very large breed kept to guard sheep.
